

Do you want to help tackle Wildlife Crime in Scotland?

Wildlife crime threatens the survival of some of our most rare and endangered animals and plants. It can interfere with how we enjoy and use Scotland's landscapes and habitats and it can often be cruel and inhumane, causing great suffering to wildlife.

The PAW Scotland fund for fighting wildlife crime can provide up to £20,000 a year to support new and innovative projects aimed at stamping out wildlife crime in Scotland.

Tackling wildlife crime is not just the job of the police – everyone has a role to play.

The PAW Scotland Fund for Fighting Wildlife Crime

What is PAW Scotland?

PAW Scotland is the Partnership for Actions against Wildlife crime in Scotland. It is a multi-agency organisation that aims to combat wildlife crime in Scotland.

What is the PAW Scotland Fund?

The PAW Scotland fund for fighting wildlife crime supports suitable projects aimed at stamping out wildlife crime in Scotland, and has £200,000 to award to projects up until the end of March 2011.

Awards can be made of up to £20,000 in any one financial year and normally for up to 50 % of the total project costs.

What is a suitable project?

The PAW Scotland Fund can support new and innovative projects to help tackle and raise awareness of wildlife crime in Scotland. Projects must support enforcement actions, improve the gathering and transfer of information and intelligence about crimes or help prevent wildlife crime.

Who can apply?

Tackling wildlife crime is not just the job of the Police – everyone can play a role. Grants can be offered to support individuals and organisations, and you don't need to be a member of PAW Scotland.

Where can I find out more Information?

If you have an idea for a project that might fit the bill visit the Grants pages of SNH's website on www.snh.org.uk and download an application form and guidance.
